Dear Brian:

Warm greetings. I was happy to hear an update that our development projects are progressing so well in South Africa. I was also happy to hear that the person who was harassing you has stopped. As a follow-up to what I told you verbally about my contact with Dr. Stiner, he called my office during the middle of the fall semester, I believe it was in early October, and left a long message on my answering machine. Dr. Stiner also called my administrative assistant, Suzanne Morton, in an attempt to talk with me. The phone message he left for me was very strange in that he spent a lot of time trying to build up his credibility and credentials, although we had never met. He then went on to denigrate you. Although I cannot cite the exact words he used, I do remember that what he said was not true, particularly about our work in South Africa. I remember thinking after listening to his message that if he knew what he said was untrue, then it was slanderous. I erased his message (our university system does not keep messages very long), not anticipating it might be needed as evidence later, and did not call him back. I also asked my administrative assistant to not receive any calls from him on my behalf.

I also learned that he made similar calls to other board members. I do hope the legal system will be able permanently end his harassment.

Best Regards, Bill
